CMI attends Clemson’s General Engineering Discovery Night

Kent Walters, one of CMI’s founders, is doing his part to help guide young engineers in their career directions. Kent recently addressed freshmen engineering students at Clemson's General Engineering Discovery Night. At this event, first year engineering students learn about career paths for different engineering disciplines from Clemson Engineering alumni. Approximately 300 freshmen engineering students participated in the event.

Kent is also a guest lecturer for the Clemson Mechanical Engineering ME4000 course. This class helps to prepare graduating students for the different career paths as well as to have prospective employers answer questions on anything from interviewing techniques to professional registration. With both groups Kent stresses that communication at all levels is key to an engineer's success.
